Between the Lines

A Short Experimental Manga About Escape

Category: Experimental manga / visual narrative

Keywords: manga, visual storytelling, escape, negative space, coming of age

A concept manga built around mirrored black-and-white worlds, where a child watching TV and an anime hero become the same story from opposite sides.

Original visual-story concept by Cole Avery. No third-party story text was used.

Concept

This is a page design book as much as a story. The panel layout carries the emotional reveal: the real world is black-dominant, the anime world is white-dominant, and the negative space tells the reader what the character cannot say directly.

Page Sequence

Pages one through four alternate between the real room, the anime world, and the adult artist drawing the whole thing.

The final page resolves into a CRT television shape, and the power light becomes the child's silhouette.

Final Line

The ending lands on a simple thesis: some kids escape into TV, but others escape into the panels themselves.
